Market Commentary

World share markets managed small gains during May, although Australia (ASX 200) declined 3.4% on the back of a large fall in the banking sector. The below table shows the performances of the major markets for both the month and calendar year to date.

Share Market Price Indices	May 2017	Calendar YTD
USA (S&P 500 Index)	1.2%	7.7%
Europe (MSCI Europe Index)	0.8%	7.4%
Japan (Nikkei Index)	2.4%	2.8%
Rest of Asia (MSCI ex Japan Index)	4.1%	20.2%
Australia (S&P ASX 200 Index)	-3.4%	1.0%

Source: Bloomberg

The main driver of the market's decline was a sharp sell-off in the banking sector, down -11.5% for the month and the only sector to be down calendar year to date. As readers would know, the ASX 200 is heavily weighted toward the Financials sector (about 35%, more than double that seen in the S&P 500 Index), and in turn is 75% comprised Australia's 4 major banks (ANZ, CBA, NAB, Westpac). To illustrate the clout of the banks on overall market performance, the following chart plots the returns of the ASX 200 Bank Index (horizontal axis) against the ASX 200 Index (vertical axis). The chart shows a strong degree of fit – that is, when banks post positive returns, so does the broader market (vice versa).

Monthly Performance Update

As at 31 May 2017

Portfolio Performance

The fund delivered another solid return over May of +2.86%. Performance comprised a majority of profitable pairs vs loss making pairs. We continue to observe fundamentals reigning over market thematic, noting during May there was a lot of stock specific news flow as a number of companies updated the market on business conditions at a large broker conference. There were also a few companies reporting financial results for the period to 31 March (e.g. Aristocrat, ALS, CSR, Dulux, James Hardie, Orica) or hosting their Annual General Meetings.

Outlook

Our view that equity markets are fully valued remains unchanged. We acknowledge market valuations will be well-supported in an era of accommodative monetary policy settings, but with share prices having soaked up these benefits, gains increasingly rely on earnings delivery. We will provide an update on the earnings progress of world share markets (being the end of fiscal year 2016-17) in our next monthly.
