COMMENTARY

The NWQ Fiduciary Fund (Fund) was down -0.49% in December. It was a disappointing quarter for the Fund, which fell -6.05% in the December quarter and -3.55% for the calendar year. The final quarter of 2018 was reminiscent of the same period 10 years earlier during the Global Financial Crisis with sharp falls across the major indices. The Australian stock market fared relatively well, but was still down -8.24% for the quarter.

The performance of the Fund was particularly disappointing with few of the underlying managers able to hedge out the full extent of the market's fall. The reason for this was that the types of stocks typically favoured by managers (i.e. momentum and low volatility) underperformed the types of stocks that are avoided or viewed as short candidates (i.e. value and higher-yield). The coincidence of this shift with the market sell-off conspired to see the Fund deviate from its historical profile where prior to the December quarter its average return in down months for the stock market was +0.12%. The encouraging news is that the mean reversion characteristics of the Fund have been persistent over time with years in which the Fund underperformed its historical average (i.e. 2014 and 2016) most always followed by years of outperformance (i.e. 2015 and 2017).
