Market commentary

Favourable conditions for both global and Australian dollar corporate bonds continued in March 2019. That said, the fund generated 74bps outperforming the Bloomberg floating rate note index by 34bps for the month. The outperformance was largely due to price gains in a small number of securities.

	1 Month	3 Month	6 Month	1 Year
SSIF	0.7%	1.9%	2.3%	4.6%
FRN	0.4%	1.1%	1.6%	3.0%
Fixed	1.8%	3.4%	5.7%	7.2%
RBA cash rate	0.1%	0.4%	0.8%	1.5%

Expectations of sustained or even looser monetary policy around the globe persist. Negative yield bonds now stand at around $US10tn globally. Rather than face certain losses, increasingly, investors are chasing returns by taking risk at ever higher prices.

In corporate bond land this technical force, combined with very low actual and expected corporate default rates, supports the further lowering of credit spreads internationally and locally.

Funds that invest heavily in fixed rate bonds tended to perform well over the month - again. Government bond yields fell (and bond prices rose) in many countries including Australia. The 10-year Australian government bond at the end of the month was 1.8% - a near century low yield.

While technical factors for corporate bonds remain positive, economic fundamentals are less encouraging.

International economic growth expectations continue to be wound back. The IMF once again cut its global growth expectations in April.

In particular Europe's economic and political malaise stymies its growth prospects. Italy continues to slip on planned fiscal reform. The country's government indebtedness has now passed the worrying 120% of GDP level and looks set to climb for foreseeable future. This makes Italy and Europe increasingly vulnerable to financial shocks.

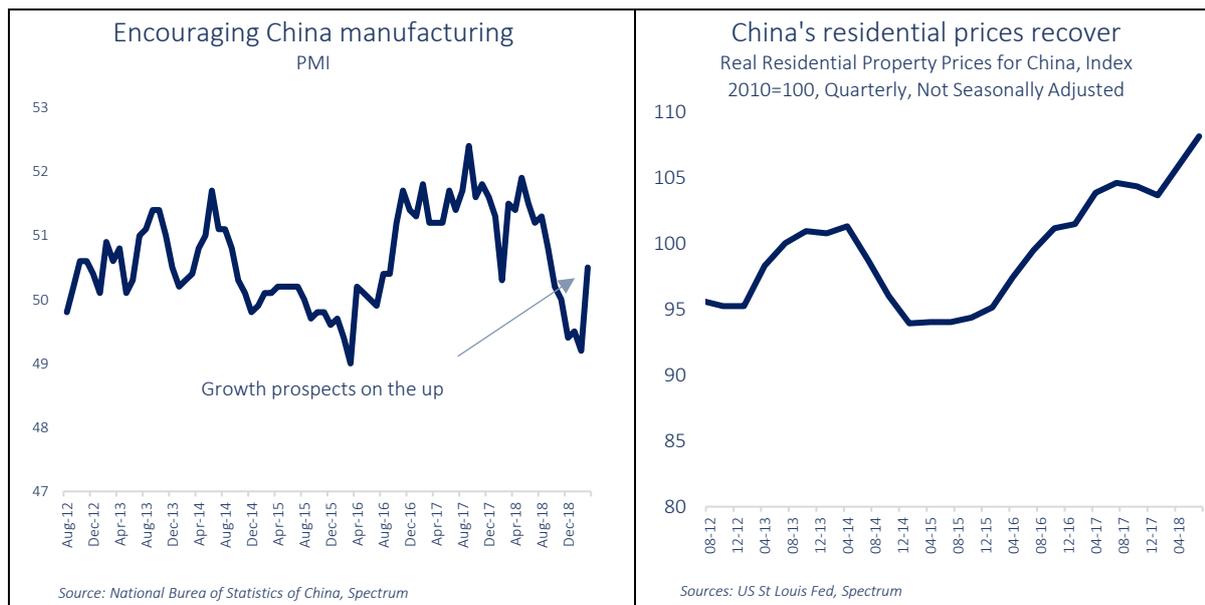

Investors' hopes for better global growth expectations appear to be largely linked to the U.S.A and China coming to a workable trade deal. That may or may not come.

Unlike much of the rest of the world, Australia's key export destination – China – has some encouraging growth trend indicators. As seen below, the Purchasers Manager Index has recently risen above the 50 level – suggesting an expanding manufacturing sector. Local residential property prices are also increasing. This often foreshadows rising construction activity.

China’s improving economic health is helping Australia’s healthy external sector. Iron ore and coal export revenues continue to be elevated.

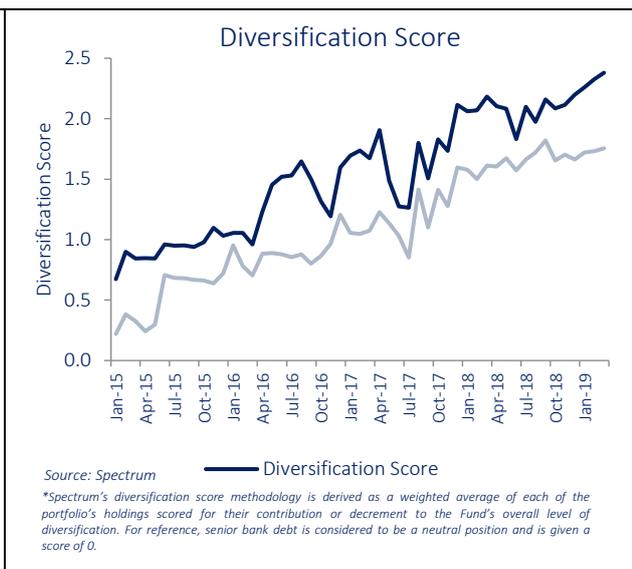

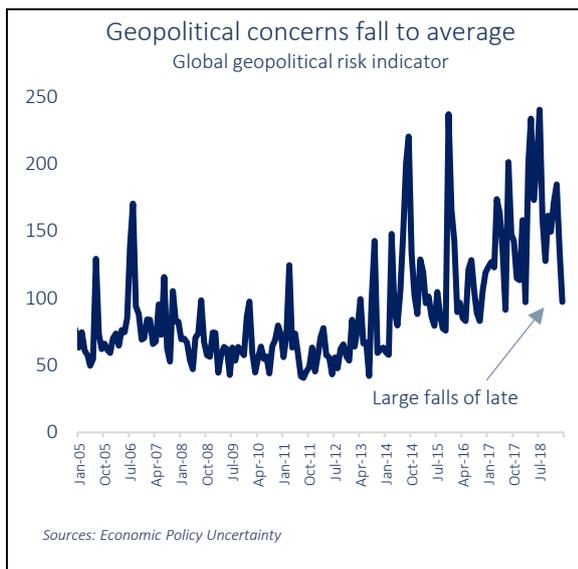

Likewise, whatever party is running the Federal Government post the May election, it has much fiscal flexibility to stimulate economic growth and perhaps help sustain the current infrastructure boom. Despite this, Australia’s economy faces the headwinds from a continued soft property market. To us the pace of home loan growth will be a key determinant on how this sector plays out over the coming quarters. Should it keep decelerating the risks rise that house declines will have a material negative impact on both the financial sector and the overall economy.

We continue to tweak the portfolio to take advantage of expected falling of A$ credit spreads in the coming months while maintaining an average credit rating of 'A-3'. We see a key risk is a jump in perceived global geopolitical risk. At present, we believe the market remains complacent in this matter. We also continue to shelter the portfolio from the potential fall-out from further declines in the local residential property market. We do this by diversifying away from direct and indirect exposure to that sector.
